

Anna Loup

Originally from Baltimore, Maryland, Anna Loup focused her undergraduate research on cooperative development, ICT, and gender. Her undergraduate thesis studied the interactions of female immigrant cooperative members with technology within the private and public spheres.

Her current research looks at the social, political, and economic implications of the Internet's policy and technical structures. A former researcher at the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN), Anna managed data collection and publication for the Generic Top-level Domains Program (gTLD). She also holds a master's in Public diplomacy, from the University of Southern California.
