

Evan Leibovitch

Evan Leibovitch is a co-founder of Linux Professional Institute, currently serves as its Director of Community Development and is on its Board of Directors. He also is a Board member of the Consumers Council of Canada.

A social entrepreneur and community builder, Evan has been heavily involved in the worlds of open source software, Internet Governance, open standards and open access to technology. He has previously served as Community Technology Access Coordinator for the United Nations refugee agency (UNHCR). He was also a founder of the Internet Society Canada Chapter, and has played key roles advocating the public interest within ICANN, WSIS, the ITU and other multilateral bodies and initiatives. He has written more than 100 articles on Linux and the phenomenon of open source.

Evan was heavily involved in the early days of ICANN At-Large. He was one of founding signers of the NARALO Charter and served as its first Chair. He also served as a Co-Chair of the first At-Large Summit, the first ICANN Cross-Community Working Group, and for years was Vice-Chair of the At-Large Advisory Committee.

Evan is currently based in Toronto, Canada
